WRAP campaign is effective and essential

by Ann Redding

WRAP, which stands for White Ribbon Against Pornography is a campaign started in 1987, by the intrepid Norma Norris. She was motivated to act when her pastor gave a sermon saying pornography was rampant because people did not care enough to change the status quo. Norma looked at her friends in the pews and thought, "We care!" Thus began the first White Ribbon Against Pornography campaign. Norma rallied her pastor, Msgr. Glenn, The Butler [PA] Fellowship of Churches and The Butler County Citizens for Decency. White Ribbons were displayed on car antennas, large white ribbons were given to the Governor and Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and a motorcade was organized. Since 1987, many individuals and communities have joined the campaign, which is always the week that begins the last Sunday in October.

The White Ribbon Campaign is shared via each individual or community's own creative activities. There have been live online events on a wide range of topics, proclamations signed by elected officials, social media memes, Facebook posts and the old-fashioned, yet powerful, message sent by wearing a white ribbon. To get ideas and resources to start your own WRAP campaign go to: <https://endsexualexploitation.org/wrap/#events>

One way Christian Action League of Minnesota is promoting WRAP week is by offering [while supplies last] a free copy of the book, The Blessing of the Thorn, by J. David Jones, Executive Director of Restoration Path Ministries. To request your free copy of The Blessing of the Thorn, write to: Ann Redding, CAL of MN, P.O. Box 583057, Minneapolis, MN 55458.

May this year's WRAP campaign awake those slumbering beneath a heavy quilt of apathy.

"I wonder what would happen if we had as much outrage about the abusive effects of pornography as we did for the high profile sexual abusers? Maybe we would say "Enough is Enough" and turn off some of the sexually explicit TV shows and movies."

City Pages

Keys restaurant on Robert St in St Paul carries the degrading, sexually explicit tabloid City Pages.

When you enter, you are welcomed by the aroma of good cooking, while being insulted by the presence of a pornographic paper.

Carrying City Pages helps customers choose an alternative, family friendly restaurant. Of which there are many.

Think about it.

That God will equip Christians to battle the evil and destructive enemy - pornography.

New pressure mounts on City Pages to stop adult ads

Capitalizing on the controversy over Backpage.com (<http://Backpage.com>), a New York activist is trying to pressure the alt weekly's advertisers.

By KRISTIN TILLOTSON Star Tribune | SEPTEMBER 6, 2012 — 5:57PM

An advocacy website is turning up the heat on City Pages over the ongoing controversy over the adult section of the classified-ad service Backpage.com (<http://Backpage.com>) and its link to child sex-trafficking.

VillageVoicePimp.com (<http://VillageVoicePimp.com>) is making an "earnest request" of Minnesotans to "gently elbow" other advertisers in the Minneapolis alternative weekly to pressure City Pages' owner, Village Voice Media, to stop publishing adult ads via Backpage, which has been linked to underage prostitution by watchdog groups and law enforcement in the Twin Cities and across the country.

Sounds like Minnesota Nice for "boycott."

Backpage, the second-largest online classified site after Craigslist, is also owned by Village Voice Media, which operates City Pages and 12 other weeklies that accept its ads.

VillageVoicePimp.com (<http://VillageVoicePimp.com>) is mostly the work of one tireless New Yorker named William Hayes. He decided to zero in on City Pages this week, he said, "because of all the action in your city right now."

In June, Minneapolis Police Sgt. Grant Snyder said that every one of the more than 20 child sex-trafficking cases he has worked on this year had ties to Backpage. Hayes also cited the recent calls by the Minneapolis and St. Paul city councils and both Hennepin and Ramsey county attorneys to discontinue the ads, as well as recent arrests of adults pimping juveniles and efforts to encourage hotel and motel employees in spotting underage victims.

Liz McDougall, general counsel for Village Voice Media, says the issue is an Internet-wide problem that won't go away, or even decrease, if Backpage stopped its adult ads, because the traffickers just move to one of thousands of other sites.

"Since Craigslist did it, there's been no evidence that child exploitation has decreased at all," said McDougall, who has a background in Internet law and cybercrime. "It's unfortunate that elected officials have focused first on Craigslist and then on Backpage as a silver-bullet solution."

Hayes' site lists City Pages advertisers from last week and this week, mostly small, local businesses. Pressure to stop advertising with City Pages poses a quandary for many of them, especially bars and nightclubs, including First Avenue, for which the weekly is the primary mode of print advertising.

"We have a really long, great relationship with City Pages, predating the Village Voice," said First Avenue's general manager, Nate Kranz. "We wouldn't just end it without really making sure there was something there. But [the issue] sounds worth looking into."

Kim Bartmann, owner of City Pages advertiser Bryant Lake Bowl, said that when she was publisher of the short-lived alt-weekly Siren in 2000, "we chose not to run sex ads because they've always been linked to teen prostitution."

Bartmann said she would consider pulling ads "if City Pages and the Village Voice company are knowingly publishing ads linked to child prostitution."

At least one advertiser, the Hennepin County Bar Association, has been swayed.

"Our contract ran out last week, and in light of statements [about Backpage] by the Minneapolis City Council and the Hennepin County attorney's office, we decided not to renew," said Mary-Margaret Zindren, executive director of the association.

Though just one person, Hayes is considered a grass-roots arm of a network working to combat child trafficking, said Kwame Fosu, policy director for the Rebecca Project, a Washington, D.C.-based organization that was instrumental in getting Craigslist's adult ads discontinued. "He's the one who knocks on doors, gets petitions signed and keeps track of everything going on."

Hayes isn't subtle about his position that anyone associated with Village Voice Media is complicit, calling the company's top editors "morally corrupt" and City Pages editor Kevin Hoffman a "heretofore ... hidden player in the child trafficking ad business."

McDougall has countered that if Backpage is shut down, pimps will migrate to online services owned by overseas companies, giving less tracking and enforcement control to American authorities.

"That's a lame response," Fosu said. "That's like if Disney World shuts down, the kids will go somewhere else, but there would be no place so well organized, with so much influence and everything in one place. Just like Disney, Backpage is a brand. All the pedophiles know to go to it, to look for code words like 'new girl in town,' which often means underage."

Village Voice attorney McDougall said that Backpage monitors its ads to spot and flag underage victims, and works with law enforcement as quickly as possible to save suspected victims who do wind up in ads.

"We answer a subpoena [for information about ads] within 24 hours," she said. The company receives about three to five subpoenas per day, she said.

Dear Ms. Redding,

Greetings. I received a post card from your organization, and the topics from the websites provided was very informative. I appreciate the fight to stop human trafficking, and it is one that I agree with. As our business is open to everyone, we cannot know the personal issues of all of our customers. Hence, we have advertised with a number of different media outlets to try to reach current and potential customers. While it is hard to know the the connection between any two things in the world, it is nice to be aware of how our business perceived in the broader community. We certainly do not wish to be considered to be porn merchants. As far as I am aware of, any money spent was for our ads alone and the ad placement was not supposed to be near or associated with adult oriented material. It seems there are other newspapers and ad services that fall into this same trap though. If you are able, could you inform me of methods in which you find and inform businesses, like ours, that have advertised with the City Pages? Also, can you provide a list of advertisers that do not operate like the City Pages and have general appeal in the way, and to whom, they advertise? I thank you for your time and consideration, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Thank you for the info, you have a valid point. We did not know that about city pages, and decided will not have it in our restaurant. Looking forward to having you and your grandchildren as customers.

Dear Barb,

I'm not submitting a resume, but some good advice for your new restaurant. I love to eat, and I love to eat out---especially with my family and friends. About once a week, I take my grandchildren downtown. One of our favorite spots to eat is Bruegger's Bagels, a short distance from Hen House Eatery.

I did not patronize Peter's Grill because they carried City Pages. The presence of City Pages is a roadblock to customers. For four years, there has been a boycott of restaurants and other businesses which carry City Pages.

City Pages is an ally of the local sex industry, which ruins so many lives. The lives of the sex workers, and the lives of the patrons and the patron's families. Each week, City Pages has lewd and degrading ads for porn stores and strip clubs.

City Pages will want Hen House Eatery to carry their paper, and they will also want to sell you ad space in their paper. Please take a close look at City Pages before you make a decision. I believe you will see that City Pages does not reflect the image you want your restaurant to convey.

If you take a stand for decency and refuse to carry City Pages, that will be one good reason to recommend your restaurant, assuming your food will be the main reason. :)

If you have any questions about the City Pages' boycott, please contact me.

My wish for you is a resounding success for your new restaurant! Downtown Minneapolis is in need of another good place to eat.

Hi Dorothy,

Thank you for contacting us at Hilltop Camper and RV. I appreciate you letting us know about our employment ad in the City Pages. This was a free listing we received (with others) from some online advertising with Star Tribune. I was not aware of the content of this paper and the ad will no longer be running in this paper.

Thank you again and have a great day,

KATIE HAUN SCHURING

The Preservationist

COLIN MICHAEL SIMMONS

Katie Haun Schuring can't hide it.

Her eyes light up, her cadence accelerates. She's talking about old Minnesota architecture—homes, towers, mills, warehouses, bridges, whatever. Here, earnest, enthused passion for the physical past is obvious.

"I think it's just fascinating," the 35-year-old beams at a south Minneapolis coffee shop. "Architecture and history marry each other so well. The physical stuff you get to see tells the story. It's tangible. That's the beauty of the built environment."

Haun Schuring's story began in tiny, close-knit Forest City, Iowa. Dreams of being an architect brought her to Central College outside of Des Moines. But, while studying abroad in London, a professor steered Haun Schuring toward preservation.

"Who are the people that lived there, and what was their story? That sorta hooked me," she says. "People want to touch the past. They want to be part of it."

After earning a master's degree in historical preservation at Ball State University, Haun Schuring worked in urban planning in Olathe, Kansas, before landing a job as a historian at a Minneapolis engineering/architecture firm. Two years ago, the Minnesota Department of Transportation hired her to helm its historical bridge program. If a bridge is over 50 years old and might need rehabbing or demolition, she's all over it.

Haun Schuring is also president of Preserve Minneapolis, a nonprofit dedicated to championing historical architecture that launched in 2003. It engages the public through forums, lectures, and walking tours. There are also "Evening Exploration" events, where happy hour dovetails into tours of spaces that are often unavailable to the public—e.g. the Pillsbury A Mill and the Grain Exchange Building's trading floor.

"It's a group of people who really value history and really value the built environment. They just get fired up about it," Haun Schuring says. "It's about educating, respecting, and celebrating our cultural history."

That includes advocacy. Preserve Minneapolis consults with the city's Heritage Preservation Commission and issues statements on hotly debated topics like the razing of Nye's Polonaise Room and the 2040 Plan, though the group doesn't exclusively rebuke developers.

"Most history can get contentious when someone wants to keep something and someone wants to tear it down. That's just the nature of it," Haun Schuring says. "You can make development and preservation work together. You just have to find common ground."

Asked about her favorite Minneapolis landmarks, Haun Schuring name-checks the usual suspects—the Poshay Tower, the Grain Exchange, the Stone Arch Bridge. She's wistful about the grand estates the city has lost to the wrecking ball, like the ones detailed in Larry Millett's essential book Once There Were Castles.

Mostly, though, Haun Schuring loves eyeballing Minneapolis' houses from the early 20th century. Ones like her 1912 Kingfield home.

"I love walking around the city because there are just so many cute little houses," she says. "And they're not National Register eligible. These aren't high examples of pristine buildings, but they're places people live and breathe and where you go home to. That's the heart of the city. It's being part of that living history." —JAY BOLLER

Beginning the week of March 18, 2019, I received two (2) postcards and an email from the following: an anonymous person on behalf of Christian Action League of Minnesota (hereinafter "CALofMn"), Ann Redding (on behalf of CALofMn, who is also the Editor of "The Beacon"), and Kathleen Abel (on behalf of CALofMn). Attached hereto as Exhibit A is a copy of a postcard the I received from anonymous together with my request to CALofMn; as Exhibit B is a copy of a postcard that I received from Ms. Redding; and as Exhibit C is a copy of an email exchange with Ms. Abel. After each Incident, specifically via letters dated March 20th and via email dated March 22nd, I sent a request that CALofMn, and its agents, not contact me. On March 28, 2019, I received another postcard. This postcard was from Diane (Diana?) Ebert. Attached hereto as Exhibit D is a copy of the postcard. I did not send a request to Ms. Ebert that she not contact me because I do not want to engage with CALof Mn, or its agents, including but not limited to, Ms. Ebert. For purposes of the Law Enforcement Information Form attached as Exhibit E is a copy of "The Beacon" which provides a photo of the Editor, and one of the harassers, Ann Redding.

7. Describe the effect of harassment has upon the victim's safety, security or privacy:

I am concerned about CALofMn and its agents disregard for my requests. They have sought out not only my business address, but my email address. The postcards are being sent to my place of business, which indicates that they know where I work. I share an office with other attorneys, who may have seen and/or heard about the postcards as the mailings go through the mail delivery in my office building, as well as the receptionist in my office suite. I am very concerned that they will harass me at my home and in my neighborhood.

8. Do you believe the harassment will continue? Why?

Yes, because CALofMn have disregarded my requests to not contact me.

9. I ask the Court to issue a Restraining Order as follows: Check all boxes (a through e) that apply.

☒ a. Respondent shall not harass:☒ me☐ minor children for whom I am the parent, legal guardian, or stepparent☐ an adult ward for whom I am the legal guardian

Minneapolis adult entertainment venues face health department scrutiny

Health inspections find "bodily fluids" at 11 sites.

By Emma Nelson (<http://www.startribune.com/emma-nelson/261800211/>) Star Tribune

MARCH 13, 2017 — 12:01AM

A Minneapolis Health Department sweep of licensed adult entertainment establishments confirmed the presence of bodily fluids at about a dozen downtown venues, raising health and safety concerns and prompting department officials to push for updated enforcement measures.

The health department sent letters to 11 business owners last week to notify them that their property had been declared a public health nuisance under Minnesota law.

Another three business owners received letters saying samples collected at their establishments were suspected to be bodily fluids but were not confirmed by a lab test.

A City Council committee will hear the findings on Monday.

"The concern from a public health perspective is, we don't want anything that is potentially infectious material ... in public spaces that are not being perfectly cleaned up," said Dan Huff, the city's environmental health director.

There are 17 licensed adult entertainment clubs in Minneapolis, clustered mostly around Hennepin Avenue downtown. Owners could not be reached or did not respond to requests for comment Friday.

The health department started seeing an uptick in cleanliness complaints at these establishments a couple of years ago, Huff said. About a year ago, after a preliminary inspection using a black light to do a visual check for bodily fluids, department staff started working on methodology for a confirmatory lab test.

Late last month, health inspectors visited all 17 establishments. More than 150 swabs taken on site were brought back to a lab and tested for an antigen found in human semen — similar to how a pregnancy test confirms the presence of an antigen found in pregnant women.

Samples that produced positive results were taken at 11 establishments, from surfaces including chairs, couches, floors, walls and bedspreads, health department inspection data show.

Under state law, the health department can order an owner or occupant to "remove or abate" a health threat within 10 days. The department has ordered the 11 establishments to clean thoroughly and prevent the recurrence of bodily fluids.

Beyond that, the health department doesn't have much regulatory power. The department cannot use the state law to issue citations, Huff said, and the existing city ordinance regulating "high-risk sexual conduct" is outdated and difficult to enforce.

The health department findings are cause for health and safety concerns, particularly for people working in these establishments, city officials said.

At Monday's Health, Environment and Community Engagement (HECE) Committee meeting, the health department presentation will include information about occupational exposure to sexually transmitted infections and federal labor guidelines for workplaces where exposure may occur.

Of the 11 establishments where inspections produced positive test results, all but one have private or semiprivate areas, according to the health department. These range from private booths for viewing adult films to rooms with loveseats or beds where patrons pay to spend time alone with an adult entertainer.

Council Member Cam Gordon, who chairs the HECE committee, said the nature of some of these private spaces coupled with the health department findings raise concerns about possible sexual activity at the establishments in question.

"I'm trying to approach it from the focus of, I'm on the City Council, this is the health department, what's the role that we play in this?" he said. "But I think also using that as an opportunity to shine more light on something that's going on in our city."

New pressure mounts on City Pages to stop adult ads

Capitalizing on the controversy over Backpage.com (<http://Backpage.com>), a New York activist is trying to pressure the alt weekly's advertisers.

By KRISTIN TILLOTSON Star Tribune | SEPTEMBER 6, 2012 — 5:57PM

An advocacy website is turning up the heat on City Pages over the ongoing controversy over the adult section of the classified-ad service Backpage.com (<http://Backpage.com>) and its link to child sex-trafficking.

VillageVoicePimp.com (<http://VillageVoicePimp.com>) is making an "earnest request" of Minnesotans to "gently elbow" other advertisers in the Minneapolis alternative weekly to pressure City Pages' owner, Village Voice Media, to stop publishing adult ads via Backpage, which has been linked to underage prostitution by watchdog groups and law enforcement in the Twin Cities and across the country.

Sounds like Minnesota Nice for "boycott."

Backpage, the second-largest online classified site after Craigslist, is also owned by Village Voice Media, which operates City Pages and 12 other weeklies that accept its ads.

VillageVoicePimp.com (<http://VillageVoicePimp.com>) is mostly the work of one tireless New Yorker named William Hayes. He decided to zero in on City Pages this week, he said, "because of all the action in your city right now."

In June, Minneapolis Police Sgt. Grant Snyder said that every one of the more than 20 child sex-trafficking cases he has worked on this year had ties to Backpage. Hayes also cited the recent calls by the Minneapolis and St. Paul city councils and both Hennepin and Ramsey county attorneys to discontinue the ads, as well as recent arrests of adults pimping juveniles and efforts to encourage hotel and motel employees in spotting underage victims.

Liz McDougall, general counsel for Village Voice Media, says the issue is an Internet-wide problem that won't go away, or even decrease, if Backpage stopped its adult ads, because the traffickers just move to one of thousands of other sites.

"Since Craigslist did it, there's been no evidence that child exploitation has decreased at all," said McDougall, who has a background in Internet law and cybercrime. "It's unfortunate that elected officials have focused first on Craigslist and then on Backpage as a silver-bullet solution."

Hayes' site lists City Pages advertisers from last week and this week, mostly small, local businesses. Pressure to stop advertising with City Pages poses a quandary for many of them, especially bars and nightclubs, including First Avenue, for which the weekly is the primary mode of print advertising.

"We have a really long, great relationship with City Pages, predating the Village Voice," said First Avenue's general manager, Nate Kranz. "We wouldn't just end it without really making sure there was something there. But [the issue] sounds worth looking into."

Kim Bartmann, owner of City Pages advertiser Bryant Lake Bowl, said that when she was publisher of the short-lived alt-weekly Siren in 2000, "we chose not to run sex ads because they've always been linked to teen prostitution."

Bartmann said she would consider pulling ads "if City Pages and the Village Voice company are knowingly publishing ads linked to child prostitution."

At least one advertiser, the Hennepin County Bar Association, has been swayed.

"Our contract ran out last week, and in light of statements [about Backpage] by the Minneapolis City Council and the Hennepin County attorney's office, we decided not to renew," said Mary-Margaret Zindren, executive director of the association.

EXHIBIT 14

Though just one person, Hayes is considered a grass-roots arm of a network working to combat child trafficking, said Kwame Fosu, policy director for the Rebecca Project, a Washington, D.C.-based organization that was instrumental in getting Craigslist's adult ads discontinued. "He's the one who knocks on doors, gets petitions signed and keeps track of everything going on."

Hayes isn't subtle about his position that anyone associated with Village Voice Media is complicit, calling the company's top editors "morally corrupt" and City Pages editor Kevin Hoffman a "heretofore ... hidden player in the child trafficking ad business."

McDougall has countered that if Backpage is shut down, pimps will migrate to online services owned by overseas companies, giving less tracking and enforcement control to American authorities.

"That's a lame response," Fosu said. "That's like if Disney World shuts down, the kids will go somewhere else, but there would be no place so well organized, with so much influence and everything in one place. Just like Disney, Backpage is a brand. All the pedophiles know to go to it, to look for code words like 'new girl in town,' which often means underage."

Village Voice attorney McDougall said that Backpage monitors its ads to spot and flag underage victims, and works with law enforcement as quickly as possible to save suspected victims who do wind up in ads.

"We answer a subpoena [for information about ads] within 24 hours," she said. The company receives about three to five subpoenas per day, she said.
